Nebraskan Entertains British 'Unknowns'

Capt. Steven A. Scott, right above, is shown with a group of "unknowns" — so-called because they were found wandering in the streets after their parents had been killed in the bombing of London. Capt. Scott and other members of a photo reconnaissance group stationed near an English orphanage decided to give the 50 youngsters a party to help them forget the horrors of war. Army trucks brought the children to the base where they were "adopted" for the day, shown movies and fed ice cream, pop and candy. — Air force photo.
