other hand, recognition is easy where which a single case of "Spanish influenza" could be observed. In cold months, epidemics of influenza may occur all the year round, yet the present epidemic raged most intensely in Europe in May and June.

Moreover, in the case of ordinary coughs (fever, pain, depression) are not so easy to diagnose as they are in influenza. Finally, ordinary coughs do not spread through the community so rapidly or as extensively as does influenza.

In most cases a person taken sick with influenza feels sick rather suddenly. He feels weak, has pains in the head, aches all over, and may sore all over. Many patients feel dizzy. Some of these patients complain of feeling chilly, and with this sensation, the temperature rises to 103 to 104. In most cases this fever gradually slows.

In appearance one is struck by the fact that the patient looks sick. His eyes are dull, and his system may be slightly "bloodshot," or "congested," as they are in influenza. The face may be running from the nose, or there may be such copious secretions in the case of a cold that may not be marked, nevertheless, in the absence of great looks and feels very sick.

What is the Case of the Disease? Do People Die of It?

Primarily, the fever lasts from three to seven days, and the patient recovers slowly. But while the proportion of deaths in the ordinary cases of influenza has been low, in some places the outbreak has been unusually severe, and a large number of children have been numerous. When death occurs it is usually the general symptoms of a complication.

What Should Be Done By Those Who Catch the Disease?

It is very important that everyone should know how to do this. Influenza should go home at once and go directly to bed. When the room is kept moderate, the patient, by not being allowed to sleep in the same room with others. In fact, no one but the nurse should be allowed in the case.

If there is cough or expectoration of lung, the patient should be taken that all such discharges should be covered up, and not thrown on a rug or paper made, and burned. If the patient has no headache, he should be given water to drink a cold compress to the fore-head, and a light sponge. Only such medicines should be given as prescribed by the doctor. It is foolish to add the draught to prescribe and may be dangerous to take the medicines advertised by patent-medicine manufacturers.

If the patient is so situated that he does not have a nurse, and who must also look after others in the family, he should wear a respirator, or wrap a handkerchief over his mouth when breathing. If possible, he should be removed from the home as soon as possible and kept at rest.

Rupert Blue, Editor, General U. S. Army, has issued The following in the form of a Public Health Report concerning the Present Epidemic of Spanish Influenza.

Although influenza is epidemic at K. N. S. it is not serious.

How can "Spanish Influenza" Be Recognized?

There is no set way in which a single case of "Spanish influenza" can be recognized, on the other hand, recognition is easy where there is a group of cases. In contrast to the outbreaks of ordinary coughs and colds, which usually occur in the cold months, epidemics of influenza may occur at any time during the year, yet the present epidemic raged most intensely in Europe in May and June. Moreover, in the case of ordinary coughs (fever, pain, depression) are not so easy to diagnose as they are in influenza.
