E.

F. NEW BUSINESS

An extended discussion occurred about the GS Roundtables newly created and structured by the Faculty Senate President and the Director of General Studies. The following concerns were expressed, including:

- a. the lack of any communication of the GS Director with members of the GS Council regarding the formation of the roundtables--the campus-wide e-mail announcements presented the GS forums as being "Faculty Senate, in conjunction with the General Studies Council . . ." without ever being presented to or discussed with the Faculty Senate or the General Studies Council. Members of the GS Council. Some expressed disappointment for the total disregard of the Council's expertise in matters so closely related to the GS Program;
- b. the apparent pre-empting of the GSC's authority in developing the objectives as stated in the GS Council Governance document (9.20.2002) II. Duties of the General Studies Council, J. "Regularly reviewing GSP structure and objectives." It was expressed that the new Roundtables appear to be set up to take on a fundamental duty of the GS Council;
- c. the unknown relationship of the Roundtables to present GSC activities, in particular to the development of the Fine Arts and Humanities and Department of History proposals;
- d. the rules for membership on the Roundtable group and why the GSC was not invited directly (and why Department Chairs were excluded?);
- e. the relationship of the Roundtables to the collection of assessment data on the current program and further, in relation to the current strategic planning process and the development of a new mission statement;
- f. the frustration of some of the GSC members in the lack of progress by the GSC toward addressing the 2001 APR recommendations.

Bridges stated that an independent (independent of the GSC) discussion of the General Studies Program was called for by the Faculty Senate Executive Committee as a result of concerns stated by several faculty members while she was serving as Faculty Senate President. The intention was to begin a campus discussion that focused on student outcomes, not the more specific questions raised in the APR recommendations. Wozniak added he had acted on behalf of the GSC given that the SVC had agreed to the Roundtables in separate meetings with the Faculty Senate Executive. He reminded the GSC that SVC Murray had asked us to lead the discussion earlier in the fall. He admitted that portions of the plan may be flawed and that he may have acted hastily, but that any plan would be flawed, and if the discussion is open, we can overcome those deficiencies.
